

BoxMLS Names Kevin Hughes as New CEO

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

SAN FRANCISCO, CA: Today, BoxMLS, a real estate technology company providing search and collaboration tools, announced the appointment of Kevin Hughes as Chief Executive Officer. He will assume responsibilities immediately and will succeed Brad Davis, who will continue as Chief Technology Officer.

“I’m grateful for the opportunity to be a part of this team of talented professionals,” said Hughes. “BoxMLS is truly taking the industry in a positive direction.” Chief Operating Officer and board chairman Jason Fayollat described Hughes as “a bold, battle-tested industry expert who will lead our charge into the national real estate technology landscape.”

In the last year, BoxMLS has bolstered its sales and engineering teams in preparation for new agreements with MLS’s across North America. The company recently added on-demand market reports and customizable agent website functionality to its core application. “We’re just getting started,” Hughes added, “Today’s MLS’s, brokers and agents are looking to become more progressive and relevant to the consumer. Our goal is to push today’s boundaries and deliver a collaboration tool for real estate data. We’re in a fantastic position to provide a solution that will meet this need for both the practitioner and the consumer.”

Before joining BoxMLS, Hughes served as the Vice President of Business Development for Centralized Showing Service, a pioneer in the showing appointment business. Previously, Hughes co-founded Clarity Security, the developer of SAFEMLS and the industry standard, Single Sign On, (SSO), Dashboard serving over 750,000 end users, hundreds of multiple listing organizations, associations, and brokerages across North America.

ABOUT BOXMLS

BoxMLS provides real-time, cross-MLS data and tools for more effective collaboration between real estate brokers, agents and their clients. Learn more at boxmls.com.

Inquiries:

Jason Fayollat
415-997-9964

jason@boxmls.com